AFS welcomes back all returning majors and minors and says greetings to all new students. I want to encourage all to stop by my office so that we can keep abreast of what is happening in your academic lives.

AFS recently began a pilot project—The First Grade Academic Improvement Initiative (FGAII)—along with Corinthian Baptist Church and the Dayton Public Schools. FGAII focuses on disadvantaged first grade students, providing them with special tutoring in math, reading, and science.

Presently, students from the College of Liberal Arts and the Raj Soin College of Business are serving as tutors. If you would like to participate as a tutor, please contact Professor Alyce Jenkins or Ms. Nancy Buckheister at 775-5532.

I wish you all the best in your studies this quarter.

FACULTY REFLECTIONS

The Analytical Student:

Teaching Students to Think Beyond Their Own Communities

Mary L. Rucker, Ph.D.
Department of Communication

Carol Morgan, Ph.D.
Department of Communication

Dr. Mary Rucker and Dr. Carol Morgan are currently team-teaching Race, Class and Gender (COM 432) as a core requirement for the Department of Communication. Rucker and Morgan believe that students need to critically deliberate and analyze how controversial issues affect us all. Rucker received an article, "Still Blind to the Poverty," written by Jonathan Alter in the September 4, 2006 issue of Newsweek Magazine from Reverend George D. Johnson of Hummelstown, Pennsylvania; who believes this article would be an appropriate piece to expose young minds to critical issues.

Alter brings to our attention some critical issues involving Hurricane Katrina with which the local government of Louisiana and our federal government are still facing. The article is timely and appropriate for student discussion on race and class issues that tend to politically, socially, and economically separate people from the negative conditions of others. Students were divided into groups and asked to answer the following questions.

They are as follows:

1.) What core issues does the article address? Explain.

We believe the article addresses broken promises that deal with a group of people who are continually being ignored and pushed to the side. The president and other government officials have done much less than they have promised to help the Katrina victims. We also believe that worker recovery accounts and homesteading never got off the ground, and there has been too much focus on the war in Iraq rather than our president and government focusing on issues at home. The article also informs us of President Bush's lack of desire to help the poor, where he could seize the opportunity to improve his credibility.

2.) To which issues does the article speak: race, class, or gender?

This article definitely speaks to both race and class issues—where the poor (both black and white) are snubbed and the rich and powerful are favored by the government. It seems as though the government is more concerned with the rich getting richer rather than helping the poor. The author also discusses President Bush's Jackson Square Speech in which Bush proposed to use Katrina as an opportunity to fight poverty, using "worker recovery accounts," "The Urban Homesteading Act," and "The Gulf Enterprise Zone." These proposals have since been forgotten by Bush.

3.) Is our government doing anything to ameliorate the problems of the Katrina victims?

The government gave a bunch of money away without direction or purpose. They didn't live up to any of their promises. They are still too concerned with the Middle East to care about America. In addition, Congress passed a bill to help the poor avoid freezing winters and a bipartisan coalition, which added $7 billion for health, education, and other social programs. However, the GOP wants to make welfare reform more punitive.

4.) Do you believe our government cares about the poor? Why or why not? Explain.

No, at least not the poor in THIS country. The government would rather give its attention, resources, and assets to the Middle East. They would rather stick their noses in other country's affairs than take care of their own citizens. As for the poor, the politicians use them to get the votes and to appeal to as many people for votes. Helping the poor isn't in the government's best interests. After politicians get elected, they take poverty issues and move them to the end of their priority list. When students combine analytical thinking with logical thinking on controversial issues, they can achieve a whole new understanding of the subject matter. With analytical thinking, students sort things out by identifying and purposefully relating associated ideas to such matters.

Thinking beyond one's own community can help students become more knowledgeable and understanding about other people's needs and conditions in a hegemonic society that tells us what is good, what is bad, or what is possible for us to achieve and how far society will permit us to go to achieve economic, political, and social success.

When race and class related issues are discussed without taking individuals' socio-economic status (SES) and what historical factors have contributed to their socio-economic status, there is likelihood that race and SES will be confounded. This reflects a disproportionate number of minority group members who are low in SES and, similarly, a disproportionate number of majority group members who are high in SES. The end result of ignoring SES when reading about or watching some disastrous situation could evoke insensitivity toward the victims' plight.

Student Reflections-FGAI

FGAI Program

By Tiffany Darden

"Today will decide if I succeed or fail tomorrow, I am going to be very successful today in each and every way, I will do my best, I will pass life's test, I will not fail, and I am somebody. I Care! I Dare! I Share!"

-Mozelle Garcia

FGAI stands for The First Grade Academic Improvement Initiative program. FGAII recruits WSU/AFS students to tutor first graders from Dayton Public Schools in reading, math and science. These three subjects are the main components that can make or break a child's academic career. If these young students do not learn these fundamentals at a young age, then their potential to excel in life is cut short.

Reverend Perry E. Henderson, who is a pastor of Corinthian Baptist Church, along with Professor Paul R. Griffin, Director of African and African American Studies at Wright State University, came together and thought that academics and church can go hand in hand. Together, these two powerful men were able to gather and form a program that is able to provide the youngsters with a friendly and safe environment that encouraged learning and understanding.

With a teaching staff of seventeen people, and six administrative personnel, Rev. Perry E. Henderson and Prof. Paul R. Griffin had a powerful team like no other. As a tutor, I was able to see the academic emergency that the Dayton

Public Schools were under at that time and I was glad to be apart of a tutoring service that was willing to help the underprivileged and overlooked.

There was an abundance of brilliant minds that were dying to shine and I was there to tap into their minds and push their academic limits. FGAII provided a religious environment, caring tutors, superb teachers, and great food! All in all, it was a worth while experience that I will never forget and hope to continue with in the next academic school year.
