WSU students aid Xenia tornado victims

by Tom Snyder

Wright State, led by the activities of many students, has been doing its part in aiding the tornado stricken areas of Xenia and Central State University.

Relief activities reached a fever pitch Thursday and Friday as food, money, and clothing were collected and delivered by vans under the auspices of Student Caucus and the Student Ombudsman's office.

WSU also lent security and technical support early Thursday morning and throughout the day in the aftermath of Wednesday's tornado which destroyed major portions of Xenia and halted class sessions at Central State. Coordinating students relief efforts was Stuart Ehrlich, publicity director for Student Caucus.

"It started at 9:30 this morning," Ehrlich said Thursday. "When I spoke with Bob Carr (Student Ombudsman) and decided that a concentrated effort would be very worthwhile."

Ehrlich then got in touch with Caucus members and with university administrators. The relief activities were set up.

WSU was set up as a "neutral pickup point" for food and clothing. Local radio and TV stations were made aware.

"We'll still maintain a work force for people to clear away debris," said Ehrlich.

"Our office will act as a clearing house agency," said Carr. Carr suspended regular activities of the Ombudsman office for Thursday.

"Everything's being done in the name of Caucus," said Jim Haughey, education rep for Caucus. "Caucus is serving as a communications point."

"The main drive now is for money," said Ehrlich.

Students set up relief fund tables all over campus Thursday and Friday for collection.

Thursday, over $1500 was collected. By early Friday the count was over $1700.

"It's a team effort," said one student collector, Jerry Crumbaugh.

"We went door to door in all the buildings, hitting the pros," said Sherri Nash.

At the end of the day on Thursday, the students collecting money found a mysterious donation at the bottom of a can used for collection.

They found three $100 bills all folded. One of the students reported they saw a "girl in a poncho" give the donation.

Identity of the female philanthropist was unknown.

A call by some students to close classes for a day to let students participate in cleaning up the stricken area was considered a possibility by WSU President Robert Kegerreis, who visited the Central State campus for six hours Thursday.

However, Kegerreis said, "The problem is this is acres of devastation. It's a big construction problem right now. There is just so much to do."

"If it becomes evident that a mass one-day or two-day manual clean-up would be helpful, then okay, but I don't think that's clear yet."

Kegerreis added, "They (at Central State) must get organized before we decide what we can do for them."

"We've been working with the students who want to do things," said Joanne Risacher of the Dean of Students office. "Generally, we've tried to help coordinate activities."

Thursday night, Ehrlich along with Eric Wagner of the Ombudsman's office delivered 3000 hamburgers donated by MacDonalds.

Another hamburger donation was expected Friday morning.

Students were out at WSU all night Thursday.

Collections of food from people in the Dayton area were sent to WSU to be delivered to the stricken areas. Students loaded and drove the delivery vans.

Three WSU owned vans were used.

Ken Davenport of the Dean of Students office confirmed 15 tornado victims stayed overnight in the WSU dorms.

EDITORIAL

The response of members of the WSU community to the disaster that struck Xenia and the surrounding areas last Wednesday can be nothing other than a source of pride for all involved.

It puts a lie to all who have contended that on this apathetic campus nobody cares. They cared Thursday and Friday.

Kudos belong to dozens of people, many who we don't, and may never, know by name, who have turned their efforts to organizing and running efforts to help provide disaster relief.

Thanks to all the students who dropped what they were doing to help collect and deliver relief supplies.

Thanks to all the university staff who cooperated so much in providing relief.

A special thanks to Stuart Ehrlich who got the show on the road and with virtually no sleep kept things running.

Thanks to everyone we should have named and didn't.

Consortium discusses plans to help CSU

by Tom Snyder

The Dayton-Miami Valley Consortium met Friday afternoon at Wright State to discuss plans for helping Central State recover from the tornado which virtually destroyed the campus Wednesday.

"The consortium meeting will arrange for the lending of the facilities in this area to allow at least the graduating students to complete their studies," said Kegerreis.

Kegerreis visited the Central State campus for six hours Thursday.

"The campus is just a sea of destruction," he said.

Kegerreis said wires, stones, bricks, trees, and other debris was scattered all over the area. Tree limbs have just been twisted off.

According to Kegerreis, two deaths, a postmaster and a child of a faculty member are dead. The director of Central State's audio-visual department was in critical condition.

"The dorms are in fairly good shape. What they don't have is power. They need food and water."

"The living conditions aren't all that bad, but the academic buildings are terribly damaged."

Kegerreis outlined the damage

Spiegel proposes to cut student activities an additional $20,000

by Frank Salsburg

[Editor's Note: Approval by the budget review committee of next year's budget came just before the Guardian went to press. A more detailed analysis will appear in Thursday's issue.]

Late Friday morning, the University Budget review committee approved a $22 million budget for the 1974-75 school year.

The budget would be an increase of over $4 million dollars from the current year.

The ten member committee began meeting on Thursday to review expected income and budget request submitted by all areas of the university. These requests totaled $1.8 million more than expected income.

The committee spent Thursday going over requests and did not turn to handling the deficit until Friday.

At that point, Executive Vice-president Andrew Spiegel submitted a series of plans to deal with the deficit which the committee adopted in total.

One member of the committee commented afterward, "I don't know what we were doing there...the budget committee did nothing more than rubber

"We have room for 50 or 60 people if we are asked to do it," he said.

University administrators held a brainstorming session Wednesday night and Thursday morning on how WSU could help Central State and Xenia.

According to Kegerreis, vice-presidents Robert Conley and Andrew Spiegel, Director of Special Events Pat O'Brien, and Safety Director Richard Grewe, plus a few others were present. Grewe went out to the stricken areas, while the rest waited for him to return.

When he came back, said Kegerreis, "We decided there wasn't anything more we could do that night."

Grewe and Security Sergeant Carl Sims were out at the stricken area all day Thursday.

The communications system of the Security office was used to aid relief efforts.

Judy Neiman, assistant to Spiegel, said WSU's physical plant department donated their services and equipment to the relief.

WSU buses were used for transportation at Central State.

Pat O'Brien said groups of university women set up a telephone committee to call university people connected with the stricken areas and check on their health.

As of Thursday, university employees suffered nine destroyed homes, four damaged. One employee and three families were reported hospitalized.

Two families were missing. 18 employees could not be reached, while 48 were reported okay.

Jim Haughey said students were attempting to prepare a list of students injured or affected. "Offers of help have been coming in all morning," O'Brien said Thursday.

"We were very lucky that we were not hit at all," she said. "That's the least we can do."

"There is nothing that I know of that we will not do," said Neiman.

"I anticipate we'll have more to do in the next few days as things clear up."

Relief activities are expected to continue throughout this week.

of the buildings. He said the roof of the library building, along with the top floor was "beyond salvage."

But "the biggest educational loss" was the four story science building. "It's just been wrecked," he said.

President Lionel Newsome's home was destroyed.

Kegerreis said WSU will probably lend its library and laboratory facilities until Central State can get off the ground. There are no estimates of how soon this can be done.

WSU has sent technicians and repairpersons to help with cleaning up the campus.

"They haven't really decided whether to send the rest of the students home, but some have gone home for awhile," said Kegerreis.

Kegerreis described the campus community as "in a state of shock."

"There was plenty of people to help, but they didn't know what to do. They were in a state of shock."

He said it was evident to the Wright State visitors what should be done, but that the people at Central State were unable to decide what concretely should be done because of their shock.

"It's an unreal scene," said Kegerreis. "It's just incredible."

Student wages will rise

by Sam Latham

Work study students will be getting a pay increase May 1st, due to the new minimum wage increase just passed by Congress, but just how much is in doubt.

Students may not be receiving the two dollar minimum passed by Congress. According to Joel Cohan, Dir of Financial Aid, "student wage rates will go up May 1st, the question is to what level."

Since Wright State is an institute of higher education, students would only have to be paid 85 percent of the minimum wage. On such a percentage basis, the new minimum for WSU students would only be $1.70, an increase of only ten cents.

Meetings are now being held to decide exactly what the actual increase in student pay can be and work out the problems involved. "We need to see how much we've spent on employment," and "how much the increases would cost the university," said Cohan.

Since the increase takes effect May 1st the matter will have to be settled very shortly.

If the budget for work study is cut or remains the same as this year's budget, it is obvious that some changes will have to occur. There is a possibility that there will be "fewer students working under work study," said Cohan. But, "More students should be able to qualify for Basic Opportunity Grants and Ohio Instructional Grants," he added.

The member explained, "Everyone got pretty much what they wanted since we had a million dollar carry over from this year."

One of the area of cuts that Spiegel proposed was an additional $20,000 cut in the Student activities area, beyond the $78,000 in cuts made at a budget review meeting last Monday.

Another meeting of the Student Budget Board and Vice-president of student services O Edward Pollock will be held today to consider if any further cuts can be made in the student activities budget.

English dept presents careers day this Thursday

by Louise Raterman

The English department will present a Careers Day this Thursday in Rm 041 of the University Center. Everyone is informally invited to hear brief talks, ask questions, and share refreshments.

Although designed for English majors specifically, any student may benefit from the program. The careers' committee has circulated questionnaires among local industries asking how they feel about hiring Liberal Arts students, and the results will be shared at the event.

The agenda is diverse. How English prepares one for careers in business and journalism, law and broadcasting, and more will be discussed. The teaching field will be omitted because it is "assumed to be the occupation for English majors," according to Dr Jim Hughes, chairman of the affair.

He is working with Dale Childers and Robert Francis, English instructors, on the ad hoc committee on careers. The trio was mobilized at the request of the college of Liberal Arts that the English department take more initiative in advising students.

Most of the speakers at the event will be graduated WSU English majors, but the committee doesn't propose to delude anybody. One English graduate, a disillusioned delivery truck driver and another without a job plan to dissect aggravation in the employment market.

Two current students, Marge Vaccar and Scott Revis, have conducted an experiment to determine the amount of sex discrimination in hiring positions. They will present their findings Thursday.

The committee would like the Careers Day to be an annual event, featuring different representative careers each time. Hughes explains the intent of the program is "to point out indeed there are all kinds of things English prepares one for."

Avoid overdue fines

by Gail Snyder

Having trouble with library books which you did return but keep receiving overdue slips for? Don't become too disgusted with the library though, because according to Sue Fish, assistant Ombudsman, the library does have legitimate reasons for this mishap and students can solve the problem themselves if they're willing to take the time.

Due to a complaint filed in the Ombudsman's office by a student who had returned some books but kept receiving overdue notices and finally had her grades withheld, the matter was checked into by the Ombudsman's office.

In response to the complaint, Frances Yu, Director of Instructional Material Services, sent a letter to the Ombudsman giving reasons for non-clearance of books which had been returned. These reasons are as follows: (1) Students don't return the books to the correct department (2) Oversights are committed by the library (3) Computer mix-ups and (4) Materials just aren't returned.

"He gave us two really good suggestions that might be helpful to the students," said Fish. "They are (1) that the students should return the books to their proper department, and (2) personally witnessing the return themselves."

However, since the library does have circulation of 10,000 items per month, it cannot give students receipts for returned books.

Aftermath of a Disaster

All that was left after Wednesday's tornado was the school in Xenia High School.

Some people say a tornado is one of the most frightening things to run across. They say the noise is like a hundred freight trains all screaming at you at once.

If there was some doubt as to those statements, there should be little left after seeing what tornadoes can do.

But in the midst of disaster, there is hope as the thousands of citizens, who came to the relief of Xenia and Central State, showed.

All pictures but the one of CSU President Lionel Newsome's house were taken by Mike Inderriden of Photographic Services. The picture of Newsome's house came from WSU President Robert Kegerreis when he visited Central State.

WSU students delivered supplies at the other end too.

CSU President Lionel Newsome's house after the tornado.

Many houses in Xenia were totally smashed.

'Schools serve the flag they fly'

by Gary Brock

"There is something wrong with a school system that sells the students a bunch of patriotic lies.

"Public schools in the US serve three interests: to manipulate consumers, to have manageable voters, and in times of war, create killers."

These comments, made by Jonathan Kozol, were among the many observations he made in regards to the public school system as it exists in the US today. Kozol, appearing at WSU Thursday evening, spoke before a large audience in Oelman Auditorium.

Kozol, a summa cum laude from Harvard and a Rhodes Scholar, taught in the Boston school system. He was fired from this job in 1965, after which he wrote the highly acclaimed Death At An Early Age, which won a National Book Award in 1967. Death At An Early Age was a strong statement describing the ghetto school situation in Boston. His second book, Free Schools leveled a strong attack against the "radical chic" who roamed from one popular cause or movement to another, leaving the dedicated behind to flounder.

Kozol told the audience that in the memory of Dr Martin Luther King, he and Cesar Chavez were going to spend the next five days in Ohio working to spread his message.

"After I wrote my first book," said Kozol, "I was supposed to be an expert on the school system. My expertise is a rather narrow one--I know how to get fired.

"I was fired ten days before the end of the school year in Boston in 1965. They fired me because I read a poem to the class by Langston Hughes, a black. They said the reason was not that he was black, but because the poem was not on the list for the fourth grade. Hughes was on the list for the eighth grade, though.

"Specifically," continued Kozol, "the charge against me was curriculum deviation. It sounds rather perverted, doesn't it? Soon after, I was hired by the OEO to work on curriculum development.

"When I was fired in Boston, I was told that if I stuck my neck out for the blacks, they would knife me in the back. Instead, the blacks hired me to set up a "Freedom School" in their community.

After giving some background into this past, Kozol then began to describe his philosophies toward education. "We used to think that it was an error that schools were failing, but now, ten years later, I realize that the schools are doing exactly what they are set up to do." What the schools are doing, according to Kozol, is politically indoctrinating the students with lies.

"In Red China it is called political indoctrination; in the US it is called the socialization process. The same thing is referred to differently because Red China is an 'evil' country."

"There is a method in their madness," continued Kozol, "the public schools know very well what they do. School is not mindless, idiotic. Schools serve the flag they fly."

Kozol then described the different ways that the students are fed myths about the world and our society. "All those history books put across myths. The classic myth was the one of continuing progress. Instead of studying history from the point of view of struggle, hardships, conflicts, victims, and victimizers, it takes the point similar to the Horatio Alger story -- things are always getting better.

"Kids are taught history starting with the Egyptian and moves from there. Always the Egyptians. Each civilization had three "contributions" to the world. Egypt's was pyramids, crop rotation, and two gods. Then they studied the Jews, who had one God, then the Christians, who also had only one God, but is was the right God.

"Then the boat came across to America, and progress really picked up. Instead of progress in terms of centuries, it was now taught that progress went in terms or periods of four years. President by President."

Kozol stated that he had just completed a new book in which he describes twenty myths taught to students in public schools. He then told how the alternative to the system--the Free School, comes into being. He concluded his lecture with the statement, "All of these free schools began with anger, with politics, with struggle; not with fun. It began with rage and rebellion against the public school system."
