

Cliff Path

Anne Britting Oleson

Follow this and additional works at: <https://corescholar.libraries.wright.edu/mrr>

Part of the Fiction Commons, and the Poetry Commons

---

Recommended Citation

Oleson, A. B. (). Cliff Path, Mad River Review, 4 (1).

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by CORE Scholar. It has been accepted for inclusion in Mad River Review by an authorized editor of CORE Scholar. For more information, please contact corescholar@www.libraries.wright.edu, library-corescholar@wright.edu.

Anne Britting Oleson

Cliff Path

Brassy light, hard enough to rap knuckles against, foretells rain, but she continues to lead the way along the narrow path through gorse and sedge and bracken toward the glimmering line that is the ruffled sea.

Humid air presses them both groundward, dampening her upper lip, his shoulder blades beneath his shirt.

No birds sing—the silence unnerves him—yet he follows.

Too soon they reach the end of the world,
the cliff face dropping away at their feet.

Where is this place? He hears his voice ask,

and she says, here. The wind freshens and the western sky grows dark. Her skirt flaps away from her legs, her hair tumbles about her brow.

To his right, the sea. Far off to his left,
the low whitewashed daub which is the cottage.

From the sky, and from her eyes—he cannot tell the difference—sparks of lightning.

Even the rain, when it comes, cannot dampen the day.