In the midst of these familiar sounds would come some strange noise, the solitary cry of a large bird of prey on the prowl. Occasionally I was made aware, by an animal galloping away from within a few yards of me, that my song, so far as I could hear it, was too feeble and too meek to satisfy the hunger of the one. I once, on a visit to an Italian villa, threw my cook out of the window. Mrs. Landor, who lived there, and who, by her nature, was an occasion for all the excitement of the day, also saw a "There, Walter! I always told you that one day you would do something to be sorry for in these furies of yours." She had been an occasion, with the more effective than temperate, and with a soft answer was more provoking than a hard. So he replied, mildly, "Well, my dear, I am sorry, if that will do you any good. If I had remembered that our best tulip-bed was under that window, I'd have flung the dog out of it, too."

In the Jungle at Night.

Sombre and awe-inspiring as a forest may be by day, it is doubly so during the mystery and darkness of night. Reynold Panyer, an English soldier in India, thus describes his watch in a jungle, where, although he did not kill the tiger he came to seek, he found an abundance of interesting sights and sounds. He had stationed himself, at eight o'clock, near the body of a dead tiger, which tigers were likely to visit. I cannot describe to you the excitement of sitting in the midst of a jungle filled full of all sorts of animals, listening to the unceasing sounds of midnight birds and beasts. For two hours I was amused by the purring of the genet-sucker, the wailing of the peewit plow, the cry of an awakened peacock, or the distant "harruh" of a whole pack of wild jackals.

ammonia receiver to let off the oil but when he attempted to do so in some unaccountable manner it would not work and the oil continued to run out. The deadly gas filled the room with him and Meanwhile he gasped for breath, and ran wildly around. After inhaling the pure air for some time he recovered, and was taken to his home at Holt street. Hastily summoned, Adam Hoefling, engineer at Schwind's brewery, prepared himself with a large sponge with water, and placing it over his mouth and nose, quickly closed the valve.

CENSUS BANQUET.
The resident business men of the district gave the Central firemen an elegant supper Tuesday night, to show their appreciation and the high esteem in which they are held by the citizens, both as firemen and gentlemen. Four-way covers were laid in the hall upstairs. The hall was tastefully decorated and fitted up for the occasion.

The firemen present were Chief Larkin, Assistant Chief Frank Baner, John Corson, Willham Wright, John Shigysider, Thomas T. Wilton, Frederick and Emma WalzCs.

William Beck was present, the driver of the engine, as a fitting response for Mr. Corson.

The whole affair was admirably managed, and much credit is due William Eckert, who held charge. The evening's enjoyment was closed by ringing the old year out and the new year in.
